“Now I have more grown up than yesterday, I can sleep alone from today. After counting from 1 to 10, I am going to sleep alone in my room, mum.”

Then the baby rabbit starts to count from 1 to 6, and something flashes across her mind – “as I ran so fast and hard today, I think I need to drink!” And counting 7, she realizes that she forgot going for a pee before going to bed. And 8, she shouts, “Since I will sleep alone tonight, I need my toys with me! They may be scared away from me.” At the end, when counting 10, the baby rabbit jumps in her mother’s arms asking her to sleep together for the last time. “Actually, the thing I need the most is you, mummy!”

Following the story, you can find yourself who can’t help encouraging and supporting the baby rabbit who has confidence but is scared a little bit, is looking forward to sleeping alone like an older girl but suspicious of staying alone in the dark room.
