A beautiful baby, like an angel, has finally arrived at home. But who would know? However hard parents try, the baby won't stop crying. How can they make peace with the baby at home again?

As the baby's crying continues, the neighbors begin to gather one by one. The stern grandmother from next door, the cheerful song of the grandfather, the usually serious police officer making a ridiculous face – everyone momentarily sets aside their usual roles to comfort the baby.

It's both amusing and heartwarming to witness how the neighbours to react to the crying baby. The book also emphasizes the significance of the collective attention and affection from many individuals in ensuring a child's healthy growth.
